Methodist Church of New Zealand Archives

Introduction

This research project is a direct result of the Christchurch earthquakes of 2010 and 2011. While the Methodist Archives were closed and inaccessible to us, we used this time to compile information about the Archives' holdings as well as information about the Methodist Church in New Zealand with the intention of posting this on the Methodist Church website.

Canterbury Methodist Churches is based on the research undertaken by Reverend Wesley A Chambers, whose papers came to the Methodist Archives after his death. It has been corrected and supplemented as far as possible, using sources held in the Methodist Archives.

Where we have been unable to find dates, [unknown] is used to indicate this.

Canterbury Methodism

A concise account of how Methodist churches were established in Canterbury is given in Our yesteryears by Rev W A Chambers. Four different branches of the Methodist Church were in Canterbury: Wesleyan, United Methodist Free, Bible Christian and Primitive Methodist. Sometimes these branch names were included in the name used by individual churches.

The names of churches often changed over the last 160 years because they were known by the name of the street they were in, or suburb which would alter. Some were called specific names after a saint or a person. All names known for each church have been collated and included here.

Another source of confusion with names of churches is Church Union.

In 1886 union took place of the Bible Christian, United Methodist Free and Wesleyan Churches. This meant considerable changes to circuit boundaries and names. The Primitive Methodist Church joined Church Union in 1913, and after this date what is known as the New Zealand Methodist Church was formed.

Researching the history of Methodist Church buildings using records held in the Methodist Church of New Zealand Archives

In the nineteenth century, individual parishes or circuits owned property through a system of trustees. This property included churches, parsonages, halls, bare land, schools and cemeteries.

In the twentieth century, ownership was encouraged to be transferred to Board of Administration of the Methodist Church of New Zealand, rather than held by trustees at the parish level.

A deeds register, documenting details of legal documents which were held in the Connexional Office in Christchurch, recorded ownership details, and dates of sale of properties. This information was also recorded in circuit schedule books held by each Parish, and reported to Methodist Church of New Zealand Conference.

The Church Building and Loan Fund Committee also approved loans for buildings, and this information is recorded within their minute books.

The Property Division of the Methodist Church became responsible for co-ordinating building projects, and built up a sizeable collection of architectural drawings and specifications.

Reports were regularly made to the Methodist newspaper, or new buildings or developments to existing structures.

Printed resources and indexes in the Methodist Church of NZ Archives

- Places information file, which holds secondary information on each church
- Methodist newspapers 1870-2000 (microfilms of newspapers are held by the National Library and other main public and university libraries)
- A history of Methodism in New Zealand by William Morley (published – copies also held in main public and university libraries)
- Church Histories Collection (published pamphlets – copies also held in libraries)
- Minutes of the New Zealand Methodist Conference (published – copies held in university libraries)
